Amanda Simmons Luby, a partner in the Orlando office of Shutts & Bowen, was recently quoted in an article in the Florida Record.

An administrative judge dismissed a state regulator’s complaint that alleged some of the races held at Hamilton Downs in Jasper, Fla., don’t count. He determined the Division of Pari-Mutuel Wagering didn’t sufficiently prove those races should be nullified, so he had to dismiss the suit.

“It’s an unfortunate ruling, but I understand why the judge made the decision that he did,” said Luby. “Ultimately, the judge was upholding precedent on an extremely narrow issue – whether the ‘racetrack’ met the skeletal requirements for conducting a certain number of horse ‘races’ in that year.”
