Logan Gans Discusses CARES Act Funding with Forbes

In an article published on April 19, 2020, Forbes reported that the opportunity for small businesses to apply for initial CARES Act funding has come and gone.

Logan Gans, a partner in Shutts & Bowen’s Tax & International Law practice group, described the distribution of bank approvals and funding bumpy at best.

“Certain banks are moving faster than others, and community banks seem to be moving faster than the larger banks,” he said.

According to the article, the most popular and best funded provision in the CARES Act is the Paycheck Protection Program (PPP) which provides $349 billion forgivable loans if funds are allocated to cover 2.5 months of payroll. In addition, $10 billion is allocated for an Economic Injury Disaster Loan (EIDL) and $17 billion to cover six months of principal and interest payments for and Small Business Administration-backed loans.

“At the end of the day, independent retailers are going to have to cobble together multiple programs to get them through,” said Logan, advising retailers to also look to their states for additional funding.
